Jackie Davies is an independent communication consultant specialising in media and communications in the field of international development, peace-building, health and education. Experienced in the use of the internet and radio for development communication and advocacy she has a solid background in participatory radio training, in interactive technologies, and in developing radio projects and training. With a recent Masters qualification in Communication for Development studies, from Malmo University Sweden, she has a firm academic and practitioner knowledge of edutainment and is an experienced evaluator of media projects. Her thematic focus has been strongly on health, particularly the role of radio and the internet in HIV/AIDS. Clients have included a broad range of international non-governmental organisations and UN agencies: UNESCO, World Bank/ InfoDev, Oxfam, Plan Finland, Search for A Common Ground, Health Unlimited and Healthlink Worldwide. She is presently evaluation advisor for the DFID 'Research Into Use programme', (www.researchintouse.com), focusing on assessment of the 'communication' of research. She previously headed the development of the Oneworld Radio network of websites, and the Radio Unit of the Institute for Democracy in South Africa.
