

Personal details and autobiography

| | |
|------------------------------|----------------------------------|
| Name | Nick Ishmael-Perkins |
| Position | Head of Communication |
| Name organisation/ institute | Institute of Development Studies |
| E-mail address | n.perkins@ids.ac.uk |
| Website (if applicable) | www.ids.ac.uk |

After completing his secondary education in Barbados, Nick did a degree in broadcast journalism at Ryerson University in Toronto (1993). He worked in Toronto as a researcher for a national broadcaster before heading to Africa to make the internationally syndicated radio series "In Search of Africa". He worked with Radio Bridge Overseas in Zimbabwe for four years eventually taking on the position of Assistant Editor. In 1997 he co-founded Radio For Development, a media consultancy providing technical support to development organisations in their programme support communication. In 2002 he did a Masters degree in Anthropology of Development at IDS and the University of Sussex. In 2004, he moved to South Africa as a Research and Learning advisor for the Africa region office of the World Association of Community Broadcasters (AMARC). He has since done a stint at Healthlink Worldwide as Head of Knowledge Management before taking up his current position at IDS.